

BROOCH

Unique ID: SF4860

Object type certainty: Certain

Workflow status: Published

Part of the bow from a large copper-alloy brooch, probably a cruciform. A small stub of head or foot survives at one end, and then the bow begins with a flat panel. Beyond this, the bow is 'facetted' or curved in both planes, with a hollow reverse. Down the centre is a flat area, decorated with two longitudinal grooves; these are largely worn away and only visible as they emerge from the flat panel. The other end of the bow is missing; the break is neither very old nor very new. 20 mm wide.
